Traditions for October

“Punky Night”

Day: 4th Thursday of October, or the 27th

Time:

What is it: Traditionally this is the night that children carved the pumpkins for Halloween followed by celebrations and contest to see who had the “best” pumpkin carving.

Samhaine

Day: 31st

Time: 1130 P.M.

What is it: The end of the pagan year and the beginning of the pagan New Year. Traditionally, this is the time when surplus stock is killed, both to provide meat for the winter months, the blood being mixed with grain to make a kind of sausage (haggis), and to conserve dwindling supplies of fodder for the flocks. The scent of the blood was thought to attract the spirits of the dead; which coincides with the idea that the veil between the living world and the dead, is thinnest during this time of year.

Samhaine herbs are: Thyme, for departed souls, Rosemary, for remembrance, and rue, which has “an astringency which can cleanse the soul”, is for repentance. The Elder tree is also revered and Elder Rob, a drink made from the harvested Elder berries, is made during Samhaine.

The use of apples, for Halloween celebrations, echoes a tradition that if you carefully peeled the skin of an apple, and threw it over your shoulder, the letter it created would be the initial of your future love. Another tradition, centered on relationships, is to cast two nuts into a fire, representing the couple in question. If the nuts explode, there is great love between them. If both whimper, love is fading, if one explodes and the other whimpers...
